take the Saturday of the football game with Yale as a holiday if they wish, although this does not mean necessarily a suspension of classes. The faculty, mindful of the undergraduates' desire to be at New Haven cheering the Crimson on to victory over Yale, has adopted the following resolution:

"The administrative board of Harvard College is authorized to take no disciplinary action because of absences from college engagements on November 25, but absences on the day before and the Monday after the game shall be treated by the board the same as absences before or after holidays.

This does not mean, adds Dean Greenough, a suspension of instruction on Saturday. Classes will meet as usual unless notice to the contrary is given.

Bernard Vaughan was born at Courtifield on August 20, 1847, and was educated in the Jesuit College at Stonyhurst. Then, as a father of the Society of Josus, for eighteen years he took an active part in the religious and civic life of Manchester. He organized clubs, concerts, buzarra and other agencies for the good of the working masses and the "submerged tenth."

But he did not neglect his aristocratic congregation. In 1906 his series of sermons on the "Sins of Society" created a nation-wide sensation and attracted world-wide attention, as did its sequel in 1907, a series on the "sins of Society Gauged by the Passision of Christ."

Father Vaughan visited Montreal in 1910 as cathedral preacher at the Eucharistic Congress, and then made a preaching and lecturing tour through Changa, the United States and Alaska.
